Historic Kenton Firehouse: A brief history

The Kenton Firehouse, dedicated in 1913, was the first city-built station in North Portland. The facility, with its distinctive Second Renaissance Revival architecture, was built on land donated by a subsidiary of the Swift Meat Company.

The main room once housed the hose wagon; the horses were stabled in what is the kitchen. Firemen lived upstairs where the North Portland Neighborhood Services office is now located.

Used by the city until 1959, the Firehouse was designated a historical landmark in 1976 and given by the city into the care of neighborhood volunteers in 1977.

The Firehouse has been a catalyst for public and private improvements in the neighborhood, and is used for family, community and business gatherings.

All proceeds from rental of the facility are used by the volunteers of the Historic Kenton Firehouse Committee to maintain and restore this historic treasure.
